

A Sad Love Song ©

Our love affair has transformed into a sad love song
Somewhere along the way, something went badly wrong

Our relationship was a crafted configuration of musical notes
Unfortunately, we cannot even identify the curing antidotes

Together, we lovingly played a smooth jazz melody
But sadly, our union has rearranged into a disastrous calamity

Yes, we were the musicians of a special song so angelic
Over time it gradually became truly sad and painfully pathetic

Our original song gracefully slid along the musical scales
As we now watch the diminishing ocean breeze deflate our sails

We played such beautifully orchestrated harmonic tunes
As we resort to watching our love float away like helium-filled balloons

Like the finely tuned guitar with tautly tight strings
Our mouths no longer singing those endearing things

The lyrics now with a rearranged tune and revised theme
Because our loving relationship is not what it used to seem

Our song, once with an energetic rhythm and rapid beat
Now we must reluctantly wave our white flags in defeat

The modified composition sounds like a slow-paced monotone hymn
While the chances of us working this out is looking so very slim

Our new genre of music, so boringly static
That it cannot be saved with even black magic

In the past, a well-composed song, now a jokingly jingle
I think that it's time for us to declare ourselves happily single

We must stop striking the black or white piano key
To end this sad love song and set each other free
This song has officially closed with a silenced pause
With no standing ovation nor grand applause

I have come to terms that there's no finale nor encore
Now that I realize we don't love each other anymore

We must lower the volume of this love song
Because sadly our love for each other is now long gone
