

Men Can Be Fragile ©

Men can be fragile too

It's not that they don't love you

Their genuine love, they may not intentionally hoard

But their immediate reaction to a committed relationship might be, "Oh, my Lord!"

Sometimes there are reasons why they cannot so easily commit

Possibly, it's a past hurt that they cannot simply forget

They keep that heartbreak buried and hidden so deep inside

Unwilling to honestly confess nor openly confide

For years, their hearts can remain painstakingly heavy

While they refrain their flow of emotions, like a river dam's levee

Covertly, they fear being again played a fool

While on the outside, they are so manly and overtly cool

They portray themselves as suave, ready to flirt

But really, deep down they're afraid of getting hurt

Unfortunately, they remain trapped in this solemn mindset

That they seem unable to free themselves or mentally reset

Like little boys holding their favorite toy, grippingly tight

Men attempt to retain their freedom, with all their mighty might

While the relationship, women attempt to progress
The more that men seem to back-pedal and regress

They adamantly resist to becoming your man or hub
Like trying to get a crying and kicking baby into the bathtub!

Therefore, women might consider being understanding and empathetic
Not to stereotype and define all men as pitifully pathetic

Maybe women should not readily kick them to the curb or outcast
But be reminded that one's behaviors are impacted by their past

True, women are aware that some men can play childish games
But they should not assume that reason is always to blame

Yes, men can be fragile too
Because sometimes they have baggage that they must also work through